Jeff Stilwell : A None's Inner Peace: Living the Good Life Without A God Pointing the Way before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised A None's Inner Peace: Living the Good Life Without A God Pointing the Way:

Meaning 21 founder Jeff Stilwell follows up his seminal work Here and Now: A Whimsical Take on God with this collection of illustrations about how to live the good life. Whether for a daily chuckle, or used as meditation pieces, Stilwell's fans agree that his comics act as visual parables. Viewers are able to explore their own lives more deeply when encountering his thoughts. "Stilwell's charming illustrations are cute and adorable on the surface. But take a moment to meditate on the deeper meaning and you might find yourself driving down a heretofore unvisited road in your mind, leading you to greater self-awareness. That's the beauty of these little gems.” Manya Vee, Social Media Sorceress Meaning 21 “The Thrashin' Jack illustrations are little brain teasers that keep us focused on positive, uplifting thoughts and help us make forward progress every day in finding the fullest expression of meaning in our lives.” Suzanne Schaefer, Communications Director Fullness Circles Foundation

About the Author Jeff Stilwell is an expert in the major faith traditions, particularly Christianity, Buddhism, Hinduism, Taoism, and Islam, all researched from the humanist perspective. In the summer of 2015, his passion for humanity led him on a 750 mile Lightning March for Humanity from Stevens Pass in Washington, across four states and forty days to Old Faithful in Yellowstone National Park. Along the way he talked with hundreds of people about his dream of a world with meaning, where all could find a sense of belonging through embracing their humanity. Returning to Seattle, inspired by those conversations, he founded Meaning 21. Stilwell is also the author and illustrator of Here and Now: A Whimsical Take on God.
