The author did a wonderful job writing this book, and I felt as if a personal story was being told to me as if I was in the room with the main character. I was reminded a bit of the show Supernatural with regards to hunting certain "beings" not of this world. However, the focus is on the care of the hunters themselves and the recipe's included in this book allow the reader to indulge in the experiences themselves. I will read this book again and try both the alcohol and food recipes as they are included--comfort foods in detail. I look forward to reading more books by Sean-Michael Argo.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. OkayBy Kindle CustomerThe story was a history of type. Reading it was like being back in school. Topic was interesting but so far out of my realm. It was at time a little boarding. Other parts interesting.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Fun all around!By Margaret CarrI really enjoyed reading this. Part story book, part spell book, part cookbook.

Shotgun Rednecks and Moonshine Wizards face off against Eldritch Horrors and the Cthulhu Mythos! There is a grimoire, known by most as the Necronomicon. It is ancient and powerful. Its very name is said to be the sound of howling demons. Upon its yellowed pages are spells and rituals that give terrible knowledge and power to those mad enough to seek it. The book is bound in human skin, inked in blood, and contains the dead names of Those Who Dwell Beyond. What you got in your paws right now, is best described, as one part grimoire and one part cookbook. In these pages you'll read about slayers who fight the good fight to keep this here world spinning just one more day. How slayers cast spells using moonshine, and fight monsters with magic shotguns, then preserve their souls and sanity with some down home cooking. That's where I come in. My name is Clifford Bartlett. I am a bootlegger, redneck outlaw, and a slayer of nasty things. The Elder Gods are coming, that's for sure, from Cthulhu to Hastur. Their villainous allies are already here. The world is infested with cults and shoggoth demons and they will do their level best to bring about the end of everything. Sometimes, all that stands between us and them, is a pan of cornbread. Hope you brought an appetite.
