Fred Reed for President (or at least, as my inner voice)By Doc SheldonI'm embarrassed by the fact that I only recently discovered Fred Reed and his inimitable writing style - I should have been reading him since his first column. I don't even know precisely how I came to check out "Nekkid in Austin"... only that I owe someone a drink for the thought that sent me here. Fred says what many of us think (the few of us that haven't already abdicated our thought processes to The Collective), but he says it in a way that is acceptably open-minded to even the most easily offended (I suspect that anyone THAT easily offended doesn't spend much time reading). He challenges us to admit that we've had our eyes tightly shut to what is going on around us and give some thought to the end-game. If you wish that some things could be the way they once were, or God forbid, even better, then I highly recommend "Nekkid in Austin" for your next break from the grind. It'll make you laugh, it may make you cry. It will certainly make you appreciate the author as someone with whom it would be great to share a bottle of single malt. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Tour 'de Farce By Merrell T. Denison What we got here is an educated redneck who writes with a dictionary of obscure words on his desk, which he refers to often.

Unfortunately, his writing makes a lot of sense. He thinks most black folks don't much like white folks. Who knew? He thinks letting homosexuals lead Boy Scouts might lead to problems. Really? He doesn't know much about women, it turns out, but who does? Reading this entertaining tour of politically incorrect and frequently funny material makes you realize how far down the rabbit hole we have descended. I couldn't put it down. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five Stars By jusdafacts good read Wildly funny, sometimes wacky, always provocative essays on the collapse of America by a Washington police reporter, former Washington editor for Harper's and staff writer for Soldier of Fortune magazine, Marine combat vet from Viet Nam, and former long-haul hitchhiker. Open the book at random, read an essay, and do what seems natural. The cash register is usually toward the front of the store.

About the Author Fred Reed is a Marine combat veteran, police reporter, amateur biochemist, former long-haul hitchhiker, and part-time sociopath living in Arlington, Virginia, across the Potomc River from the Yankee Capital.
