Michael WilsonThe idea of anonymous confessions is far from original; I recall several zines in the eighties and nineties containing transcripts from messages left on confessional hotlines in major cities. Translate that format into the digital age, and you have Not Proud, a collection of anonymous confessions to peruse at your leisure. Divided into eight sections comprising of the seven deadly sins and a catch-all Misc., the confessions rand from hilarious to depressing, with a lot in between. The most interesting thing about Not Proud is how even leafing through the confessions at random, you're sure to find one or two that you can at least relate to, if not directly share. In the end, a regretful cross-section of the human condition that is probably more entertaining than it should be.

'I put poison ivy on my ex-husband's underwear so he would think he had a disease.' 'Sometimes I have people over for dinner. When it comes time to serve the food, I always serve myself just a little bit more. I don't know why. I just have to have the most.' 'I dumped a guy once because I hated his voice. He was very good looking, but when you're in a long-distance relationship, a voice really does count for a lot.' NotProud.com creators Scott Huot and GW Brazier selected more than 250 of the most compelling anonymous confessions from their widely popular website. Part confessional, part peep show, this can't-put-down collection - categorized by the seven deadly sins (and the catchall 'Miscellaneous') - showcases the poetic, pathetic and occasionally bizarre thoughts and behaviours of everyday people. From fondling statues, to vengeful cat-food sandwiches, to an unabashed celebration of cheese, "Not Proud" feeds our inner voyeur with an array of the best and worst of human behaviour.
