Old Coots never forget -- not the important things in life, anyway... They remember great days afield with good hunting companions and great bird dogs, and they like to tell their stories about the most memorable times -- days of joy or sadness, laughter or tears . All the important stuff. "Old Coots Never Forget" is a collection of 37 of these stories by an old curmudgeon in the North Country who remembers it all.

About the AuthorJerry Johnson, author, curmudgeon, bird hunter, and dog trainer, lives in the North Country of the upper Midwest. His blog, Dispatches from a Northern Town, features stories about bird hunting, bird dogs, and bird guns; memoirs, social and political commentary, and other pieces of creative non-fiction. He has published two novels: Hunting Birds - The Lives and Legends of the Pine Country Rod, Gun, Dog and Social Club, and Scrawny Dog, Hungry Cat, and Fat Rat - A Tragedy for Children. Both are available in paperback and Kindle editions at .com. A former newspaper reporter, photographer, editor, columnist, and public relations director, he and his wife Patti live in a 130-year-old log house on the small farm they manage for wildlife habitat. He hunts, fishes, and shoots clay target games with a group of friends that call themselves The Over the Hill Gang. Dispatches from a Northern Town (Blog): <http://dispatchesfromanotherntown.com>
