Laugh out Loud - just a funny thing to pick up and read!!By K KellyA man at our office just bought this from . He brought it in during lunch this week and we read some of these out loud and just laughed and laughed. It is almost addictive, you just want to read a few more, then skip ahead a few pages and pick up one or two more to read. It's fun to read it in a group setting and then to see who "gets it" immediately and who needs to say it a few times before it finally sinks in.

Have you met the renowned karate instructor, Marsha Larts? She is one of many aliases found in this one-of-a-kind parody. Just as expectant parents turn to a book of baby names, those in need of an alias (or just a good laugh) turn to The Useless Book of Meaningful Names, the #1 resource for expressive pseudonyms and relevant nom de plumes. About the AuthorJon Grizzle is a graduate of University of Memphis (B.S.Ed., 2002) and Harding Graduate School of Religion (M.A.C.M, 2006). He currently facilitates teambuilding and professional development events for corporations, schools, and non-profit organizations. His writing career began as early as Kindergarten in which he wrote and illustrated many works that dazzled his family and friends. Much to his dismay, the aforementioned riveting material has yet to be published. Matt Ransom is a graduate of the University of Memphis (B.S.Ed., 2002) and Union University (M.Ed., 2005, Ed.S., 2008). For 15 years, his teaching has spanned from the elementary to collegiate level, from China to the United States. He is an accidental author who color-coordinates text with the table of contents to prevent getting lost in his own dissertations.
