Fay B. Bolton : The Wafflehoffers: Curious Maple before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Wafflehoffers: Curious Maple:

Maple Wafflehoffer was excited spring had arrived. That meant a visit to her aunt and uncle's farm that was located on the other side of Waffleville. After a hearty lunch of waffles, Maple's uncle told her that she could go outside and play but he warned her to stay away from the brown mare and her foal. Maple being a curious young girl took that as a challenge and went in search of the foal, despite her uncle's wishes. In her search, Maple came across several farm animals that were of not much help in her tracking down the foal. It wasn't until she came upon the farmer's sheepdog that she was able to locate them. Upon finding the foal, Maple feared she'd made a frightful mistake and wished she could be transported back to the safety of her family. There are a few more surprises in store — though the biggest one may lie with Maple herself.

About the AuthorFay B. Bolton lives in Rocklin, CA with her Golden Retriever who cannot accept the fact that he's not a lap dog. While Fay was in school she won the Cadbury's award for writing an essay on how chocolate was made, that's when she took writing seriously. After the publication of a non-fiction article on the subject of Rattlesnakes. Fay decided she preferred to write fiction as it challenged her creative mind and her imagination. Enjoying writing fiction,

Fay wanted to challenge herself further and took up writing rhyming stories for children. Learn more about Fay:
